1915-frasu AN UNLUCKY MAN.

Pate Against Him, or the Luck That Met Reuben Pullaway.

Reuben Pullaway was the editor of the Echo City Blazer. For nearly two score years the latchstring of his office had always been out and he had moided opinion until he grew moldy. He had referred to every man in town as a perfect gentleman, and to every lady as a queen of society, and as he grew old he longed for a chance to roast somebody.

"Oh," he would exclaim, in the silent wentide, while the tears coarsed down his furrowed cheeks, "oh for an opportunity to turn loose and crucify somebody! I am filled with adjectives which would look magnificent in print, but I dare not! If I were to attack any one he would stop his paper, and perhaps take out his advertise-

So Reuben Pullaway wrote flattering paragraphs about people, and grew sullen and taciturn. And his cross seemed greater than he could bear.

"Reuben." said the editor's wife one morning, as he looked sadly at an untasted breakfast and reached for his hat, "why not roast some imaginary individual? Turn loose the vials of your wrath upon Horatio Eldergroove, for instance. Nobody can possibly be offended, since there is no such a man, and you'll have just as much fun torturing him as though he lived." The editor folded his wife to his bosom weeping; but, oh, gentle reader, his tears were tears of joy! "Augusta Sophronia," he cried, "it is an inspiration! Oh, how I will paralyze Horatio Eldergroove!" The beautiful glow of dawn was in the heart of Reuben Pullaway.

The leading editorial in The Blazer that week was a corker. "This city," it said, "has been visited by an unprincipled scoundrel of the name of Horatio Eldergroove; he has green whiskers and only one eye, which is in the middle of his forehead; he has a trunk like an elephant and tusks a foot long. He is a reproach to mankind; a hyena who lives on the bones of dead men; a ghoul, a vampire, a serpent; he would play checkers on the coffin of his mother and rob a ghost of its shroud,

There was a column and a half of this sort of literature, and when it was written the editor felt refreshed and young once more. All the accumulated bile of years and years had flown into the article.

"The beauty of it is," said the editor to the foreman, "that since there is no such a man as Horatio Eldergroove, with his green whiskers and single eye, nobody can possibly be offended."

"True enough," responded the foreman, with a shoreless smile.

In the quiet, dreamy dusk of a summer evening a wayworn stranger journeyed into Echo City; he had green whiskers and but one eye, which was in the center of his forehead; he had a trunk like an elephant and tusks a foot long.

His first act was to purchase a copy of The Blazer, and his wrath may be better imagined than described when he read the leading editorial. He immediately went to The Blazer office and sat on Reuben Pullaway and made him (Reuben) eat a of glue and a towel; and then he poured coal oil on Reuben's hair and set fire to it; and he fed Reuben into a stop cylinder press with a folder attached, so that when the unfortunate man emerged he was folded ready for mailing.

Then the stranger went down town and addressed a meeting of citizens.

On the following day all the merchants enred of the severest form of dyspepsia by Hood's Sarsaparilla, Full particulars sent if you write C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass. their orders for job work.
"You should be ashamed of yourself," said the mayor; "Mr. Horatio Eldergroove, whom you so violently abused in your scurrilous paper, is an eastern capitalist, who came here to establish seven packing houses, employing 800,000 men. He has now gone away in disgust."

"And so his name was really Horatio Eldergroove?" groaned the heartbroken editor; "and he had green whiskers and one eye and a trunk and tusks a foot long. Well, it was just my luck."

THE END. -Fremont (Neb.) Tribune.

Sufficient Excuse.

Not long ago Miss Ella Potts told her pupils one "composition day" that they might each write a letter to her making an excuse for not inviting her to an imaginary birthday party.

The scholars were called upon in turn to read their letters aloud. One little girl made her excuse as follows:

"DEAR MISS POTTS-I want to apologize for not asking you to come to my birthday party yesterday. I fully intended to do so, but—as I always do in everything—I put it off until the last minute. When at last I started, and reached your gate, I saw the doctor's buggy standing there, and think-ing some one was very ill I did not go in.
